Sinister Sentiments: A Horror Story Collection

These abilities have to be trained extensively at all levels of academic studies and later in professional life. We shall probably be safe in concluding that with the human race, as with other races, size is but one trait of higher evolution, which may or may not coexist with other traits; and that, within certain limits, it is determined by local conditions, which here favour preservation of the larger, and elsewhere, when nothing is gained by size, conduce to the spread of a smaller variety relatively more prolific.
